

Centralized models are often presented as the holy grail of core management and support, but cores are distinct operations and serve diverse clientele that might vary from location to location. This session will explore models of core support and will try to answer the question “Is Central Support Always Best?”.