I will describe our methods for finding low-dimensional manifolds in order to find concise descriptions for high dimensional biological data. We often find that hyperbolic geometry -- which describes hierarchical tree like structures -- produces useful insights into the structure and temporal dynamics in biological datasets.